

Court of Justice EC, 23 March 2006, Mülhens v OHIM

TRADEMARK LAW

Likelihood of confusion: overall impression– mere phonetic similarity not decisive

- The Court of First Instance therefore correctly considered the overall impression created by the two signs at issue, as regards their possible conceptual, visual and aural similarities, for the purpose of the global assessment of the likelihood of confusion.

Therefore, one cannot deduce from paragraph 28 of the judgment in Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer that there is necessarily a likelihood of confusion each time that mere phonetic similarity between two signs is established.

Finding of fact is outside jurisdiction of the ECJ

- The Court of First Instance's decision, contained in paragraphs 52 to 54 of the judgment under appeal, according to which the goods concerned are generally sold in such a way as to enable the relevant public to examine them visually, constitutes a finding of fact which is outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice to review on appeal.

It is clear from the second subparagraph of Article 225(1) EC and the first paragraph of Article 58 of the Statute of the Court of Justice that an appeal lies on points of law only. The Court of First Instance thus has exclusive jurisdiction to find and appraise the relevant facts and to assess the evidence. The appraisal of those facts and the assessment of that evidence thus do not, save where the facts and evidence are distorted, constitute a point of law which is subject, as such, to review by the Court of Justice on appeal (see Case C-37/03 P BioID v OHIM [2005] ECR I-0000, paragraph 43, and the case-law there cited).

Global assessment – counteracting similarity

- That global assessment means that conceptual and visual differences between two signs may counteract aural similarities between them, provided that at least one of those signs has, from the point of view of the relevant public, a clear and specific meaning, so that the public is capable of grasping it immediately

(see, to that effect, Case C-361/04 P Ruiz-Picasso and Others v OHIM [2006] ECR I-0000, paragraph 20).

36 Therefore, having stated correctly in paragraphs 48 and 49 of the judgment under appeal that the global assessment also includes the assessment of the distinctive and dominant components of the signs in question and that aural similarities may be counteracted by the conceptual differences between those signs, the Court of First Instance could, without misconstruing the effect of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94, decide that the degree of similarity between the signs at issue is not sufficiently great to find that the relevant public might believe that the goods concerned come from the same undertaking or, as the case may be, from undertakings that are economically linked.

Source: curia.europa.eu

Court of Justice EC, 23 March 2006

(P. Jann, N. Colneric, J.N. Cunha Rodrigues, M. Ilešič (Rapporteur) and E. Levits)

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (First Chamber)

23 March 2006 (*)

(Appeal – Community trade mark – Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation (EC) No 40/94 – Likelihood of confusion – Word mark ZIRH – Opposition by the proprietor of the Community trade mark SIR)

In Case C-206/04 P,

APPEAL under Article 56 of the Statute of the Court of Justice brought on 6 May 2004,

Mülhens GmbH & Co. KG, established in Cologne (Germany), represented by T. Schulte-Beckhausen and C. Musiol, Rechtsanwälte, appellant,

the other parties to the proceedings being:

Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM), represented by S. Laitinen and A. von Mühlendahl, acting as Agents, defendant at first instance,

Zirh International Corp., established in New York (United States), represented by L. Kouker, Rechtsanwalt, intervener at first instance,

THE COURT (First Chamber), composed of P. Jann, President of the Chamber, N. Colneric, J.N. Cunha Rodrigues, M. Ilešič (Rapporteur) and E. Levits, Judges,

Advocate General: D. Ruiz-Jarabo Colomer,

Registrar: M. Ferreira, Principal Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 6 October 2005, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 10 November 2005, gives the following

Judgment

1 By its appeal, Mülhens GmbH & Co. KG seeks to have set aside the judgment of the Court of First Instance of the European Communities of 3 March 2004 in Case T-355/02 Mülhens v OHIM – Zirh International (ZIRH) [2004] ECR II-791 (hereinafter ‘the judgment under appeal’), dismissing its action for annulment of the decision of the Second Board of Appeal of the Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM) of 1 October 2002 (Case R 247/2001-2), rejecting the appellant’s opposition to the application for registration of the word sign ‘ZIRH’ (hereinafter ‘the contested decision’).

Legal framework

2 Article 8(1) of Council Regulation (EC) No 40/94 of 20 December 1993 on the Community trade mark (OJ 1994 L 11, p. 1) provides:

‘Upon opposition by the proprietor of an earlier trade mark, the trade mark applied for shall not be registered:

...

(b) if because of its identity with or similarity to the earlier trade mark and the identity or similarity of the goods or services covered by the trade marks there exists a likelihood of confusion on the part of the public in the territory in which the earlier trade mark is protected; the likelihood of confusion includes the likelihood of association with the earlier trade mark.’

3 Article 8(2) of that regulation is in the following terms:

‘For the purposes of paragraph 1, “Earlier trade marks” means:

(a) trade marks of the following kinds with a date of application for registration which is earlier than the date of application for registration of the Community trade mark, taking account, where appropriate, of the priorities claimed in respect of those trade marks:

(i) Community trade marks; ...

...

4 Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94 is in terms substantially identical to those of Article 4(1)(b) of First Council Directive 89/104/EEC of 21 December 1988 to approximate the laws of the Member States relating to trade marks (OJ 1989 L 40, p. 1).

Background to the dispute

5 On 21 September 1999, Zirh International Corp. (hereinafter ‘Zirh Corp.’) applied to OHIM for registration as a Community trade mark of the word sign ‘ZIRH’ for the goods and services in Classes 3, 5 and 42 of the Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purposes of the Registration of Marks of 15 June 1957, as revised and amended (hereinafter ‘the Nice Agreement’).

6 On 24 May 2000, the appellant filed notice of opposition under Article 42 of Regulation No 40/94 to registration of the trade mark for all the goods and services covered by the application. That opposition was based on the existence of an earlier Community trade mark, a mixed word and figurative mark containing the verbal element ‘SIR’ accompanied by a heraldic figure, which had been registered for goods in Class 3 of the Nice Agreement corresponding to the following description: ‘Perfumery, essential oils, cosmetics, hair lotions, dentifrices, soaps’ (hereinafter ‘the earlier mark’).

7 That opposition was rejected by a decision of 29 June 2001 of the Opposition Division, which held, in particular, that even though the goods and services in question might be marketed through the same channels of distribution or in the same points of sale, the differences between the two marks manifestly outweighed the phonetic similarity which could exist between those marks in certain official languages of the European Union, with the result that there is no likelihood of confusion between the two marks.

8 On 10 July 2001, the appellant brought an appeal against that decision before the Second Board of Appeal of OHIM, which, by the contested decision, dismissed the appeal and upheld the Opposition Division’s decision, the grounds of which it adopted.

Procedure before the Court of First Instance and the judgment under appeal

9 By application lodged at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 4 December 2002, the appellant brought an action against the contested decision, seeking its annulment on the basis of a single plea in law alleging misconstruction of the expression ‘likelihood of confusion’ for the purposes of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94.

10 The Court of First Instance first recalled, in paragraphs 33 to 43 of the judgment under appeal, the applicable legislation and appropriate case-law regarding ‘likelihood of confusion’ with an earlier trade mark.

11 The Court of First Instance then proceeded to make a global assessment of all relevant factors, bearing in mind, in particular, their distinctive and dominant components, as a result of which it found that the phonetic similarity between the marks in question is to a large extent counteracted. The Court expressed itself in the following terms:

‘44 As regards the visual comparison of the opposing marks, it should be stated, first, that although the verbal elements of those two marks have in common the second and third letters used, namely the letters “ir”, the visual differences between them are not negligible in that the first two letters, “s” and “z” respectively, are different. Moreover, those verbal elements are composed of a different number of letters, the letters “ir” being followed by the letter “h” in the trade mark applied for. Furthermore, the verbal sign of the earlier mark is accompanied by a heraldic device, whilst the mark applied for is made up exclusively of a verbal sign written in ordinary characters. Accordingly, in the global assessment of the signs in question, the existence of elements particular to each sign means that the overall impression of each sign is different.

45 As regards the phonetic similarity, OHIM does not dispute that the verbal elements contained in the two trade marks have similarities in certain official languages of the European Union. As OHIM rightly pointed out at paragraph 26 of its response, in a number of Member States the earlier mark will most probably be pronounced as it is in English because “sir” is a well-known English word, even to non-English speakers. Even if the Community mark applied for can be pronounced in various ways in different languages, it must be held, as OHIM accepts, that the trade marks in question are phonetically similar, at least in the English-speaking countries and in Spain, given that the respective differences between the pronunciations in English and in Spanish are not particularly marked. Accordingly, the marks must be regarded as phonetically similar in those countries.

46 As regards the conceptual comparison between the opposing trade marks, the applicant does not challenge OHIM's findings on this point. As OHIM rightly submitted, there is no conceptual similarity since it is likely that the average consumer in the Member States will think of the English word "sir" given the widespread acquaintance with that word in Europe. Since the word "zirh" has no obvious meaning in any of the 11 official languages of the European Union, the general public will accordingly perceive the word "zirh" as being an invented word. It must for that reason be held that there is no conceptual similarity between the two trade marks.

47 Consequently, there is no visual or conceptual similarity between the trade marks SIR and ZIRH. The trade marks in question are phonetically similar in certain countries. It should be noted in that connection that, according to the case-law, it is possible that mere phonetic similarity between trade marks may create a likelihood of confusion ([Case C-342/97] Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer [[1999] ECR I-3819], paragraph 28, and Case T-99/01 Mystery Drinks v OHIM – Karlsberg Brauerei (MYSTERY) [2003] ECR II-43, paragraph 42).

48 As has already been stated above at paragraphs 39 and 42, it is necessary to make a global assessment of all factors relevant to the circumstances of the case based on the overall impression created by the trade marks in question, bearing in mind, in particular, their distinctive and dominant components.

49 According to the case-law of the Court, the phonetic similarities may be counteracted by the conceptual differences between the trade marks in question. For there to be such a counteraction, at least one of the marks at issue must have, from the point of view of the relevant public, a clear and specific meaning so that the public is capable of grasping it immediately ([Case T-292/01 Phillips-Van Heusen v OHIM – Pash Textilvertrieb und Einzelhandel (BASS) [2003] ECR II-4335], paragraph 54).

50 In this case that is the position in relation to the verbal element of the earlier trade mark SIR, as has just been pointed out in paragraph 46. That view is not invalidated by the fact that that word mark does not refer to any characteristic of the goods in respect of which the registration of that mark has been made. That fact does not prevent the relevant public from immediately grasping the meaning of that verbal element of the earlier mark. The fact that one of the marks at issue has such a meaning is sufficient – where the other mark does not have such a meaning or only a totally different meaning – to counteract to a large extent the phonetic similarities between the two marks (see, to that effect, BASS, ... paragraph 54).

51 In the present case, that counteraction is corroborated by the fact that the marks SIR and ZIRH are also visually different. In that connection, it should be noted, as OHIM rightly stated, that the degree of phonetic similarity between two marks is of less importance in the case of goods which are marketed in such a way that, when making a purchase, the relevant public usually also perceives visually the mark designating those goods (see, to that effect, BASS, ...

paragraph 55).

52 Contrary to the applicant's submission, that is the position in the present case. The applicant's arguments that the goods covered by the earlier mark are not sold exclusively on sight and that an important channel for the sale of the applicant's products is through perfumeries and hairdressing and beauty salons do not undermine that conclusion.

53 It should be noted in that connection that the applicant has entirely failed to demonstrate that its goods are usually sold in such a way that the public does not visually perceive the mark. The applicant merely submits that one traditional sales channel is through perfumeries and hairdressing and beauty salons, such that the consumer cannot select the product directly but only via a seller.

54 Even if perfumeries and hairdressing and beauty salons are important channels for the sale of the applicant's goods, it is not in dispute that, even in those places, the goods are generally displayed on shelves in such a way that consumers are able to examine them visually. Therefore, even if it is not excluded that the goods in question may also be sold in response to an oral order, that method cannot be regarded as the usual method of sale of those goods.

12 Therefore the Court of First Instance concluded, in paragraph 55 of the judgment under appeal, that the degree of similarity between the marks at issue is not sufficiently great for the Court to find that the relevant public might believe that the goods concerned come from the same undertaking or, as the case may be, from undertakings that are economically linked and, accordingly, dismissed the appellant's action.

The appeal

13 The appellant is asking the Court to set aside the judgment under appeal, to annul the contested decision and to order OHIM to pay the costs. In support of its appeal, it relies on a single ground of appeal, containing two parts, alleging misconstruction of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94. Each of the two parts sets forth two distinct complaints.

14 OHIM and Zirh Corp. contend that the appeal should be dismissed and the appellant ordered to pay the costs.

The first part of the single ground of appeal (the likelihood of confusion)

The first complaint

– Arguments of the parties

15 The appellant submits that the partial similarity and the partial identity between the goods and services concerned, on the one hand, and the phonetic similarity between the marks in question, on the other hand, lead to the conclusion that there is a likelihood of confusion between those marks. According to the appellant, who relies in that regard on paragraph 28 of the judgment in Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer, Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94 means that obvious similarity in one of the sensory criteria establishes a likelihood of confusion. In this case, that risk results from the phonetic similarity.

16 OHIM does not dispute the appellant's analysis as regards the similarity of the marks. However, it argues that the effect of Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer consists solely in the acceptance of the possibility that phonetic similarity can be sufficient to establish the likelihood of confusion.

– Findings of the Court

17 At the outset, it must be noted that, according to the seventh recital in the preamble to Regulation No 40/94, the assessment of the likelihood of confusion depends on numerous elements and, in particular, on the recognition of the trade mark on the market, the association which can be made with the used or registered sign, and the degree of similarity between the trade mark and the sign and between the goods or services identified.

18 The existence of a likelihood of confusion on the part of the public must therefore be appreciated globally, taking into account all factors relevant to the circumstances of the case (see, to that effect, in respect of Directive 89/104 [Case C-251/95 SABEL \[1997\] ECR I-6191](#), paragraph 22, and [Case C-425/98 Marca Mode \[2000\] ECR I-4861](#), paragraph 40).

19 That global assessment must, as regards the visual, aural or conceptual similarity of the marks in question, be based on the overall impression created by those marks, bearing in mind, in particular, their distinctive and dominant components (see, in particular, in respect of Directive 89/104, SABEL, paragraph 23, and Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer, paragraph 25).

20 In that regard, after assessing the overall impression created by the two signs at issue, the Court of First Instance held, in paragraph 47 of the judgment under appeal, that those signs are not visually or conceptually similar but that, on the other hand, they are phonetically similar in certain countries, and did not rule out that such similarity alone could create a likelihood of confusion.

21 It is conceivable that the marks' phonetic similarity alone could create a likelihood of confusion within the meaning of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94 (see, in respect of Directive 89/104, Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer, paragraph 28). However, it must be noted that the existence of such a likelihood must be established as part of a global assessment as regards the conceptual, visual and aural similarities between the signs at issue. In that regard, the assessment of any aural similarity is but one of the relevant factors for the purpose of that global assessment.

22 Therefore, one cannot deduce from paragraph 28 of the judgment in Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer that there is necessarily a likelihood of confusion each time that mere phonetic similarity between two signs is established.

23 The Court of First Instance therefore correctly considered the overall impression created by the two signs at issue, as regards their possible conceptual, visual and aural similarities, for the purpose of the global assessment of the likelihood of confusion.

24 It follows that the first complaint in the first part of the single ground of appeal must be rejected as unfounded.

The second complaint

– Arguments of the parties

25 The appellant submits that aural similarity is sufficient to establish a likelihood of confusion if the goods identified by the marks in question are not bought exclusively on sight. As regards the goods concerned, consumers cannot help themselves in a number of shops where they therefore have to ask for them expressly. In addition, those goods are very frequently bought by telephone. According to the appellant, the consumer who has, in all those situations, only a phonetic perception of the mark 'SIR' has no knowledge of the visual characteristics of the goods identified by that mark.

26 OHIM submits that the aural similarity is not decisive in this case because the goods concerned are normally bought on sight. Indeed, it submits that those goods are marketed in such a way that, at the time of sale, the relevant public perceives the mark as identifying those goods visually. Therefore, although it might be possible to refer verbally to the goods concerned, OHIM argues that the channel of distribution requiring an oral request does not represent the typical situation or means of sale of those goods. Consequently, it concludes that there is, in this case, no likelihood of confusion within the meaning of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94.

– Findings of the Court

27 As regards the appellant's second complaint concerning the effect of the methods of marketing the goods in question, it must be stated that the appeal is asking, in reality, that the Court of Justice substitute its own assessment of the facts for that of the Court of First Instance.

28 The Court of First Instance's decision, contained in paragraphs 52 to 54 of the judgment under appeal, according to which the goods concerned are generally sold in such a way as to enable the relevant public to examine them visually, constitutes a finding of fact which is outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice to review on appeal. It is clear from the second subparagraph of Article 225(1) EC and the first paragraph of Article 58 of the Statute of the Court of Justice that an appeal lies on points of law only. The Court of First Instance thus has exclusive jurisdiction to find and appraise the relevant facts and to assess the evidence. The appraisal of those facts and the assessment of that evidence thus do not, save where the facts and evidence are distorted, constitute a point of law which is subject, as such, to review by the Court of Justice on appeal (see [Case C-37/03 P BioID v OHIM \[2005\] ECR I-0000](#), paragraph 43, and the case-law there cited).

29 Since the appellant has not relied upon any distortion of the facts and evidence submitted to the Court of First Instance, the second complaint in the first part of the single ground of appeal must be rejected as inadmissible.

30 Therefore, it must be held, so far as the first part of the single ground of appeal is concerned, that the Court of First Instance did not misconstrue the effect of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94.

31 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the first part of the single ground of appeal must be rejected as being in part unfounded and in part inadmissible.

The second part of the single ground of appeal (counteraction of aural similarity)

The first complaint

– Arguments of the parties

32 The appellant submits that the point of departure of the Court of First Instance's reasoning, as expressed in paragraphs 48 and 49 of the judgment under appeal, is wrong. According to the appellant, aural similarity cannot be counteracted by visual and conceptual differences.

33 OHIM contends that if the Court approves the reasoning developed by the Court of First Instance in Phillips-Van Heusen v OHIM – Pash Textilvertrieb und Einzelhandel (BASS), paragraph 54, according to which the conceptual and visual differences between two marks are likely to counteract their aural similarities provided that at least one of those marks has, from the point of view of the relevant public, a clear and specific meaning, so that the public is capable of grasping it immediately, it should apply it in this case.

– Findings of the Court

34 As has been pointed out in paragraph 19 of this judgment, the global assessment must, as regards the visual, aural or conceptual similarity of the marks in question, be based on the overall impression created by those marks, bearing in mind, in particular, their distinctive and dominant components.

35 That global assessment means that conceptual and visual differences between two signs may counteract aural similarities between them, provided that at least one of those signs has, from the point of view of the relevant public, a clear and specific meaning, so that the public is capable of grasping it immediately (see, to that effect, Case C-361/04 P Ruiz-Picasso and Others v OHIM [2006] ECR I-0000, paragraph 20).

36 Therefore, having stated correctly in paragraphs 48 and 49 of the judgment under appeal that the global assessment also includes the assessment of the distinctive and dominant components of the signs in question and that aural similarities may be counteracted by the conceptual differences between those signs, the Court of First Instance could, without misconstruing the effect of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94, decide that the degree of similarity between the signs at issue is not sufficiently great to find that the relevant public might believe that the goods concerned come from the same undertaking or, as the case may be, from undertakings that are economically linked.

37 It follows that the first complaint in the second part of the single ground of appeal must be rejected as unfounded.

The second complaint

– Arguments of the parties

38 The appellant submits that the essential meaning of the trade mark 'SIR' is clear only if that trade mark is pronounced in the English way. Its pronunciation in every other official language of the European Union is meaningless and constitutes a sign of pure fantasy. Therefore, according to the appellant, the Court of First Instance could not find that, in this case, one of the marks in question has a clear and specific meaning in order to decide that the aural similarity is counter-acted by the conceptual and visual differences between the two marks. The Court of First Instance therefore fell into error of law in the interpretation of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94.

39 OHIM argues that the figurative trade mark 'SIR' involves a clear and specific meaning in the terms of the judgment of the Court of First Instance in Phillips-Van Heusen v OHIM – Pash Textilvertrieb und Einzelhandel (BASS), paragraph 54. Therefore, the Court of First Instance did not make an error of law in the interpretation of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94.

– Findings of the Court

40 As regards the appellant's second complaint, relating to the assessment of the conceptual and visual differences of the signs at issue, it must be stated that the appeal is, in reality, asking the Court of Justice to substitute its own assessment of the facts for that of the Court of First Instance.

41 It is sufficient to point out, in that regard, that the Court of First Instance's decision contained in paragraphs 50 and 51 of the judgment under appeal, according to which the visual and conceptual differences between the signs at issue counteract their phonetic similarity, constitutes a finding of fact which is outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice to review on appeal. Indeed, it is clear from the second subparagraph of Article 225(1) EC and the first paragraph of Article 58 of the Statute of the Court of Justice that an appeal lies on points of law only. The Court of First Instance thus has exclusive jurisdiction to find and appraise the relevant facts and assess the evidence. The appraisal of those facts and the assessment of that evidence thus do not, save where the facts and evidence are distorted, constitute a point of law which is subject, as such, to review by the Court of Justice on appeal (see BioID v OHIM, paragraph 43, and the case-law there cited).

42 Since the appellant has not relied upon any distortion of the facts or evidence submitted to the Court of First Instance, the second complaint in the second part of the single ground of appeal must be rejected as inadmissible.

43 Therefore, it must be held that, as regards the second part of the single ground of appeal, the Court of First Instance did not misconstrue the effect of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94.

44 It follows from the foregoing considerations that the second part of the single ground of appeal must be rejected as being in part unfounded and in part inadmissible.

45 Since neither part of the single ground of appeal raised by the appellant in support of its appeal is well founded, the appeal must be dismissed.

Costs

46 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, which applies to appeal proceedings by virtue of Article 118 thereof, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since OHIM and Zirh Corp. have applied for costs and the appellant has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the appeal;
2. Orders Mülhens GmbH & Co. KG to pay the costs.

---

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL RUIZ-JARABO COLOMER

delivered on 10 November 2005 1(1)

Case C-206/04 P

Muehlens GmbH & Co. KG

v

Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM)

(Appeal – Community trade mark – Word mark ZIRH – Opposition by the proprietor of the Community trade mark SIR – Dismissal of opposition)

1. This appeal is directed against the judgment delivered by the Court of First Instance (Fourth Chamber) on 3 March 2004, (2) which dismissed the action for annulment brought against the decision of the Second Board of Appeal of the Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) ('OHIM'), which had dismissed the opposition by the company Muehlens GmbH & Co. KG ('Muehlens'), the owner of the Community figurative mark 'Sir' and the appellant in this case, against the word sign 'Zirh' for perfumes and cosmetics.

2. The issue is once again the interpretation of the term 'likelihood of confusion' used in Article 8(1)(b) of the Community Trade Mark Regulation. (3) The appeal is based on a single plea, divided into two parts, concerning, respectively, the assessment of the existence of that likelihood, having regard to certain ways in which the products bearing the conflicting marks are marketed and the rule developed by the Court of First Instance in earlier judgments to the effect that the predominance of the conceptual elements may counteract phonetic similarities.

3. Also of interest is a judgment delivered on 6 May 2004 by the Landgericht (Regional Court) Hamburg (Germany), sitting as a Community trade mark court, in proceedings concerning infringement of an industrial property right between the abovementioned undertakings in respect of those same trade marks, which found in favour of the proprietor of the mark 'Sir' and against the proprietor of the mark 'Zirh', taking the view that the likelihood of confusion between them was proved. Although it is not a prerequisite for giving judgment on the substance of this case, that fact deserves some consideration in relation to the European system of trade marks.

I – The Community Trade Mark Regulation

4. The abovementioned Regulation No 40/94 is the basic instrument for dealing with the problems inherent in this case.

5. According to Article 4 thereof, a Community trade mark may consist of any 'signs capable of being represented graphically, particularly words, including personal names, designs, letters, numerals, the shape of goods or of their packaging, provided that such signs are capable of distinguishing the goods or services of one undertaking from those of other undertakings.'

6. Article 8 sets out the relative grounds for refusal, among which Article 8(1)(b) states as follows:

'1. Upon opposition by the proprietor of an earlier trade mark, the trade mark applied for shall not be registered:

(a) ...

(b) if because of its identity with or similarity to the earlier trade mark and the identity or similarity of the goods or services covered by the trade marks there exists a likelihood of confusion on the part of the public in the territory in which the earlier trade mark is protected; the likelihood of confusion includes the likelihood of association with the earlier trade mark.

...'

7. Although they do not have a direct bearing on the substance of the case, it is appropriate to consider the provisions of Regulation No 40/94 relating both to the rule applicable in cases of infringement of the rights conferred by those industrial property rights and to Community trade mark courts.

8. As regards the first of those aspects, Article 14 provides:

'1. The effects of Community trade marks shall be governed solely by the provisions of this Regulation. In other respects, infringement of a Community trade mark shall be governed by the national law relating to infringement of a national trade mark in accordance with the provisions of Title X.

2. ...

3. The rules of procedure to be applied shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of Title X.'

9. In that regard, Article 91(1), contained in the second section, 'Disputes concerning the infringement and validity of Community trade marks', in Title X, headed 'Jurisdiction and procedure in legal actions relating to Community trade marks', requires the Member States to designate in their territories a limited number of 'national courts and tribunals of first and second instance, hereinafter referred to as "Community trade mark courts"', which shall perform the functions assigned to them by this regulation'.

10. Pursuant to Article 92, which appears in the same title and section,

'The Community trade mark courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction:

(a) for all infringement actions and – if they are permitted under national law – actions in respect of threatened infringement relating to Community trade marks;

(b) for actions for declaration of non-infringement, if they are permitted under national law;

...?.

II – Background to the appeal

A – The facts of the case at first instance

11. On 21 September 1999, Zirh International Corp. applied to OHIM for registration of the word mark ‘Zirh’ as a Community trade mark, the application being published on 3 April 2000 in Community Trade Marks Bulletin No 27/2000.

12. The goods and services in respect of which registration was sought are in classes 3, 5 and 42 of the Nice Agreement concerning the International Classification of Goods and Services for the Purposes of the Registration of Marks of 15 June 1957, as revised and amended.

13. On 24 May 2000, pursuant to Article 42 of Regulation No 40/94, Mühlens filed a notice of opposition in respect of all products and services covered by the application, and in doing so relied on an earlier Community graphic mark which contains the verbal element ‘Sir’ to designate goods in class 3 of the Nice Agreement, corresponding to the description ‘Perfumery, essential oils, cosmetics, hair lotions, dentifrices, soaps.’

14. On 2 October 2000, Zirh gave details as follows of the types of goods and services covered by its application:

‘Soaps; perfumery; essential oils; cosmetics; hair lotions; aftershave lotions; baby, body and face powders; baby and hair shampoos; hair conditioner; shaving balm, cream, gel and lotion; lip balm and gloss; bath and shower gel; skin cream and lotion; deodorants and antiperspirants; facial scrubs; hairstyling preparations; body oil; perfume; skin cleansing cream and lotion; skin moisturiser; skin, deodorant and toilet soaps; sun block preparations and sun screen preparations’ in Class 3;

‘Hygienic and beauty care services; hairdressing services; beauty salon services; cosmetic research and development; perfume research and development’ in Class 42.

15. Nevertheless, Mühlens maintained its initial position.

16. By decision of 29 June 2001, the Opposition Division of OHIM rejected the opposition essentially on the ground that the visual and conceptual differences outweighed the phonetic similarity of the signs, with the result that there was no likelihood of confusion between the two marks.

17. On 10 July 2001, Mühlens filed with OHIM a notice of appeal against the decision of the Opposition Division, pursuant to Article 59 of Regulation No 40/94.

18. On 1 October 2002, the OHIM Second Board of Appeal dismissed the appeal and confirmed the contested decision, essentially on the basis that, although the products and services at issue are marketed through the same channels of distribution or points of sale, the differences between the two trade marks outweigh the phonetic similarities of the two signs in some official languages of the European Union.

19. Mühlens brought an action for the annulment of that adverse decision by an application received at the Registry of the Court of First Instance on 4 December 2002.

B – The judgment under appeal

20. The application contained a single plea, alleging infringement of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94. The applicant emphasised the similarity of the signs ‘Sir’ and ‘Zirh’ when they were pronounced, which, in its view, rendered them identical, particularly in view of the fact that when perfumes and cosmetics are sold, they are not visible to consumers in every case.

21. Although it accepted that the trade marks at issue were partially phonetically similar, OHIM denied that such similarity gave rise to any likelihood of confusion, having regard to the considerable conceptual differences between a mark which has a clear meaning in English and one which was merely invented.

22. The Court of First Instance, after setting out the criteria laid down in the case-law regarding the likelihood of confusion, (4) considered whether the degree of similarity between the trade marks at issue was sufficiently great to create a risk of confusion.

23. It compared them from the visual, phonetic and conceptual points of view, coming to the conclusion that they were only similar as regards their pronunciation in certain countries. (5)

24. Next, following the precepts laid down by the Court of Justice to the effect that mere phonetic similarity of marks may create a likelihood of confusion, (6) it made an overall assessment of all the relevant factors, concentrating on the overall impression given by the marks at issue, and paying particular attention to their distinctive and dominant elements.

25. That examination led to the finding that the word ‘Sir’ had a clear and specific meaning, which the relevant public grasped immediately, (7) even though it did not refer to any characteristic of the products. It inferred that the phonetic features were outweighed by the conceptual aspects and the visual differences observed, since the trade mark ‘Sir’ included a heraldic device, (8) and it applied the rule that it had developed previously (9) concerning the counteraction of phonetic similarities by conceptual divergences.

26. The judgment under appeal attributed little importance to the similarity between the marks at issue, considering that the marketing of the goods in question is normally carried out in such a way that the consumers perceive the signs with their eyes and not solely or preponderantly with their ears, contrary to the contention of the applicant and now appellant, which produced no evidence whatsoever to support its thesis. (10)

27. Consequently, the Court of First Instance rejected the view that the degree of similarity between the trade marks was great and conducive to confusion regarding the undertaking from which the products and services at issue emanated, despite the fact that they were partially similar, or identical, (11) dismissing the claim for annulment and the action as a whole.

III – Procedure before the Court of Justice and the forms of order sought

28. The Registry of the Court of Justice recorded the lodging of Mülhens's appeal on 6 May 2004 and of OHIM's defence on 27 July 2004.

29. The parties lodged a reply and a rejoinder respectively on 20 October 2004 and 28 January 2005.

30. The hearing, attended by representatives of Mülhens, OHIM and Zih International Corp., was held on 6 October 2005.

31. The appellant claims that the Court of Justice should:

- set aside the judgment of the Court of First Instance of 3 March 2004 in Case T-355/02;
- annul the decision of the OHIM Second Board of Appeal of 1 October 2002 (case R 657/2001-2) concerning opposition proceedings between Mülhens and Zih International Corp.;
- order OHIM to pay the costs.

32. OHIM, supported by the intervener at first instance, contends that the Court of Justice should:

- dismiss the appeal;
- order the appellant to pay the costs.

IV – Analysis of the plea in law

33. Mülhens puts forward a single plea in law, namely misconstruction of the concept of likelihood of confusion in Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94, which it divides into two parts: first it claims that such a likelihood exists, referring, in particular, to the influence that the method of marketing of products and services has on the way in which phonetic, visual and conceptual similarities are taken into account; the other challenges the rule to the effect that, in certain circumstances, phonetic similarities are counteracted by those of a conceptual nature.

A – The first part of the sole plea

34. It must be pointed out, first of all, that this part of the plea might be viewed as inadmissible, since it seeks reversal of the factual finding as to the lack of any likelihood of confusion made by the Court of First Instance, when, under Article 58 of its Statute, assessments of that kind fall outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Justice. (12)

35. Nevertheless, in application of the interpretative principle in dubio pro actione, which favours continuation of the proceedings until a decision is given on the substance and derives from the right to effective judicial protection, a closer look at the various submissions made by the appellant, and at its reply, will enable the true meaning thereof to be disentangled.

36. For Mülhens, the infringement of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94 derives from the Court of First Instance's disregard of the doctrine of the Court of Justice that mere phonetic similarity of trade marks may give rise to a likelihood of confusion. (13) According to the appellant, that similarity automatically gives rise to such a likelihood, thereby rendering visual and conceptual analysis entirely irrelevant.

37. In its opinion, the importance of phonetic similarity is reinforced by the fact that customers do not always have the goods in front of them at the time of purchase, since frequently the consumer acquires them in ways in which the pronunciation of the mark plays an important role, such as by way of gifts, mail-order and telephone sales, and recommendations in specialised trade circles, for example in beauty and hairdressing salons and perfumeries.

38. To demonstrate this, it annexed to its reply a photocopy of the judgment delivered on 6 May 2004 by the Landgericht Hamburg (Germany) in trade mark infringement proceedings in which the parties and the marks were exactly the same as in the present action. In that judgment, the German court accepted that there was a likelihood of confusion between the marks in question, explicitly contradicting the judgment under appeal here, which is of an earlier date.

39. OHIM does not challenge the appellant's analysis regarding the phonetic similarity of the marks, but does not accept the preponderant role attributed to it. It also considers that the Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer judgment, cited above, envisages, in paragraph 28, only the possibility that phonetic similarity may create the likelihood of confusion, it being necessary, before such a conclusion is arrived at, for an overall assessment to be made of all the relevant factors and of the products at issue.

40. It downplays the importance of the repercussions of the aural communication of the signs in the selling process, describing the examples given by the appellants as inadequate and unrepresentative. In its view, the situations to which they relate do not constitute the general rule, whereas the rules laid down in the case-law of the Court of Justice seek specifically to determine typical or average circumstances.

41. In addition, OHIM finds no difficulty with the judgment of the Landgericht Hamburg, provided that the facts were different from those presented to the Court of First Instance; if that were not the case, it would be concerned about the situation that would result from the decision, because it would place the parties in a delicate and almost untenable position, given that national trade mark courts, when evaluating the likelihood of confusion, would be using legal rules different from those indicated by the Community Court which, although a Court of First Instance, exercises a fundamental jurisdiction in the European Union. The latter aspect, however, has no direct impact on the outcome of this appeal, for which reason it will be considered below, once the plea on which the appeal is based has been fully dealt with. (14)

42. My approach to the admissibility of the appellant's submission having been thus clarified, consideration of this part of the plea must focus on the dicta of the Court of Justice in its judgment in Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer, referred to above, specifically in paragraph 28 thereof, where it states that the possibility cannot be ruled out 'that mere aural similarity between trade marks may create a likelihood of confusion'.

43. Logically, the meaning of that sentence is not absolute, as the appellant contends, since the judgment declares that phonetic similarity is sufficient for a referring court, where the products are similar, to decide that such likelihood exists. A grammatical interpretation of those words suggest that the Court of Justice does not rule out the possibility that such similarity is sufficient to infer that there is a likelihood of confusion, but it does not necessarily require that conclusion to be arrived at merely on the basis of acoustic resonances.

44. From the logical and linguistic point of view, where ‘the possibility is not excluded’ that something may happen, it is recognised that it is not very probable and, implicitly, that such an event is unusual. In any case, that statement provides no basis for inferring a general rule according to which it is doubtful that a specific case will arise.

45. A comparison with other language versions of that judgment of the Court of Justice supports the proposed interpretation. That is clear, both from the German, the language of the case on that occasion, ‘sich nicht ausschließen lässt, daß allein die klangliche Ähnlichkeit der Marken eine Verwechslungsgefahr ... hervorrufen kann’, and from the French, ‘qu’il ne saurait être exclu que la seule similitude auditive des marques puisse créer un risque de confusion’, or from the English, ‘it is possible that mere aural similarity between trade marks may create a likelihood of confusion’; this comparison does not purport to be exhaustive, but in order to dispel any doubt, the comparison can also be drawn with the wording in Dutch, ‘niet valt uit te sluiten, dat de enkele auditieve gelijkenis tussen de merken verwarring ... kan doen ontstaan’, or in Italian, ‘non si può escludere che la somiglianza fonetica dei marchi possa creare un rischio di confusione’.

46. As regards the claim concerning the importance of certain commercial channels in which the products in question are not visible to the consumer, thus making phonetic similarity more important, it must be pointed out, without going into the substance of the problem, that the Court of First Instance, in paragraph 53 of the contested judgment, rejects it only because the applicant had not made out a sufficient case. Accordingly, Mülhens’s criticism of that decision on the ground that it did not attach to those channels of distribution the importance which they allegedly deserve is irrelevant since it relates to a statement made merely for the sake of completeness in paragraph 54, which did not contradict the statement made in the preceding paragraph.

47. Furthermore, as regards assessment of the evidence, it must be borne in mind that, pursuant to Article 225 EC and Article 58 of the Statute of the Court of Justice, an appeal is to be limited to matters of law, so that the Court of First Instance has sole jurisdiction to establish and adjudicate on the relevant facts, and to weigh the evidence, except where it distorts one or the other. (15) Consequently, the Court of Justice has no authority to review tasks of that kind carried out by the Court of First Instance.

48. In view of the foregoing, the first part of the plea should be rejected as unfounded, since there does not appear to have been any infringement whatsoever of Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94.

B – The second part of the sole plea

49. By the second part of its plea, the appellant challenges the rule of ‘counteraction’ of phonetic similarities by conceptual divergences between signs, employed by the Court of First Instance in a number of judgments. (16) First, it criticises the basis of the rule, considering it to be contrary to the case-law of the Court of Justice. Second, it doubts whether, in this case, the English word ‘sir’ has, on the basis of its pronunciation, a meaning that can be grasped by the relevant public.

50. In its first assertion, it denies that the overall evaluation of all the factors implies that the signs must be scrutinised from the phonetic, visual and conceptual points of view, because, in its opinion, if the similarity perceived using one of the senses is manifest, it may give rise to a likelihood of confusion – once again making a clear allusion to the Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer judgment already referred to, and specifically to paragraph 28 thereof.

51. In that regard, it is appropriate to recall paragraphs 43 to 45 of this Opinion and on that basis to reject the interpretation of the judgment contended for and to focus on its actual terms.

52. As regards the appellant’s second argument, concerning the meaning of the word ‘sir’, it must be emphasised, above all, that it concerns a finding of fact made by the Court of First Instance in the proceedings for annulment, which cannot be reviewed by the Court of Justice pursuant to Article 58 of its Statute, as I have already explained. Nevertheless, if that argument is interpreted as calling in question the legality of the abovementioned counteraction rule, it is necessary to throw some light on the matter.

53. This is not the first time that the validity of this rule for evaluating the likelihood of confusion has been in issue before the Court of Justice; nor is it the first time that I am giving my views on the matter. (17) The essential case-law derives from the SABEL judgment, in which the Court of Justice held that all the relevant factors of each specific case must be taken into consideration, (18) adding that, with regard to the visual, aural or conceptual similarity of the trade marks in question, the global assessment must be based on the overall impression created by them, (19) and in particular their distinctive and dominant components. (20)

54. That evaluation of the visual, phonetic or conceptual elements which are presumed to be decisive is a matter, in each case, for the court hearing the case, in so far as judicial review by the Court of Justice in this area does not extend to purely factual aspects.

55. In another Opinion I have already put forward the view (21) that such a review would only be pertinent where the contested rule was relied on in an absolute and a priori manner without prior individual analysis of the various components, resulting in its automatic application in a way that conflicted with the abovementioned case-law of the Court of Justice. Of course, it would also be necessary for the appellant to allege distortion of the facts, (22) a possibility not to be taken into account here since no such allegation was made.

56. In paragraphs 44 to 47, the contested judgment examined all the components in accordance with that case-law and then, in paragraph 50, dealt with the factor that it considered decisive, the conceptual aspect, which relates to the meaning of the verbal element of the mark 'Sir'.

57. Consequently, conforming as it does with those rules, the judgment of the Court of First Instance did not in any way whatsoever infringe Article 8(1)(b) of Regulation No 40/94, for which reason the second part of the sole plea in law must be rejected as unfounded.

C – The judgment delivered by the Landgericht Hamburg

58. As I stated in point 38 of this Opinion, the Landgericht Hamburg delivered a judgment on 6 May 2004 acknowledging the likelihood of confusion in trade mark infringement proceedings between the appellant in the present proceedings and the intervener at first instance in respect of the same signs.

59. That fact is not surprising if we examine the structure of the Community trade mark protection system, although it is not normal, and still less desirable, that it should arise.

60. Community and national trade marks do not co-exist in watertight compartments without any connection, but rather cohabit in a shared area; even though they do not support each other, they are certainly interrelated, to the extent of being reciprocally permeable, (23) since, as stated in the preamble to Regulation No 40/94, Community law has not replaced the trade mark laws of the Member States. (24)

61. This correspondence with national law is reflected in cases of infringement of Community trade marks, a field governed by Community law and, on an ancillary basis, the laws of the Member States, (25) as if the principle of subsidiarity had been inverted. (26) Thus, under Article 14 of Regulation No 40/94, whilst the effects of the Community trade mark are governed exclusively by that regulation's provisions, infringements of Community trade marks are governed by the State provisions applicable to national trade marks, a system which, quite rightly, some writers have described as confused. (27)

62. Jurisdiction to hear actions for infringement of rights conferred by the Community trade mark was attributed solely to the Community trade mark courts (28) pursuant to Article 92(a) of the Trade Mark Regulation. Thereafter, the regulation appears to be rooted in unstable ground as a result of terminology conducive to uncertainty. (29) In brief, and without undertaking a detailed examination, which would go beyond the scope of the present Opinion, I would draw attention to the following aspects.

63. In the procedural area, those courts, after deciding for themselves whether they have jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 93 and 94 of Regulation No 40/94, (30) assume responsibility, under Article 97(3), for applying the provisions in force for actions of that kind within the legal system of the country in which they are located, without prejudice to the specific provisions of the regulation, which are in fact scant and diffuse, despite the unitary and independent orientation which the legislature sought to attribute to them. (31)

64. From the substantive point of view, Regulation No 40/94 merely grants the proprietor, in Article 9(1) and (2), a ius prohibendi and a right to compensation which is 'reasonable' (sic) for events subsequent to publication of the Community trade mark application which, after due publication of registration of the mark, are prohibited. To this must be added the right to ask that a trade mark reproduced in a dictionary, encyclopaedia or any other reference work should be accompanied by an indication that it is a registered trade mark. (32) In such cases, there is no mention of the applicable law: the ius and the forum coincide, so that the competent court relies on its own law, which in this case acquires the status of Community law. (33)

65. On the other hand, other rights of action, in particular actions for compensation, are governed by the law of the Member State in which the infringements have occurred (lex loci commissi delicti), pursuant to Article 98(2) of Regulation No 40/94, with the consequence that the Community trade mark courts are being progressively called on to have recourse to foreign law, thereby detracting from the unitary approach which was intended for industrial property of this kind. (34) Thus, legal provisions and case-law regarding liability for damage vary from one Member State to another, and this has repercussions on the sum which the proprietor of a Community trade mark whose rights have been infringed will obtain by way of compensation in one forum or another, (35) depending on the criteria used to evaluate the loss suffered and the level of compensation.

66. For their part, provisional and precautionary measures adopted by the Community trade mark courts are subject to the lex fori, in accordance with Article 99 of Regulation No 40/94. Their scope depends, however, on the origin of their jurisdiction: if it derives from paragraphs 1, 2, 3 or 4 of Article 93, they may be enforced in any Member State; in contrast, those adopted by the Community trade mark court of the place where the harmful event was committed will only take effect in the Member State of that judicial authority. (36)

67. To conclude this outline of the European legislation on the jurisdiction of Community trade mark courts, a very interesting feature must be mentioned, the purpose of which is to avoid conflicting judgments.

68. Conscious of the latent danger inherent in this complex web of procedural and substantive provisions, the legislator inserted in Regulation No 40/94 a number of mechanisms to deal with the problem. Attention should be drawn to the 16th recital in the preamble (37) and to the provisions on related actions (Article 100) and on cases involving circumstances similar (38) to litispendency (Article 105). Also included in this category is Article 96(7) concerning the powers of the Community trade mark courts in relation to counter-claims.

69. All those provisions contemplate the possible suspension of proceedings that are pending or inadmissibility of the originating application, declared either by the Community trade mark court or by another national judicial authority, the sole justification for this being the avoidance of conflicting decisions, as indicated in the 16th recital to the regulation.

70. However, it is not appropriate to dwell on the details of those provisions, since they relate to situations not relevant to the dispute brought before the Landgericht Hamburg, which was not dealing with a counterclaim or a problem of litispendency or related actions in connection with infringement of a national trade mark; the case before it concerned infringement of the rights conferred by a Community trade mark, for which compensation was sought, whilst at the same time the Court of First Instance was dealing with an application for the annulment of a decision of the OHIM Second Board of Appeal on the opposition by the company Mülhens concerning registration of the trade mark 'Zirh'. It must be recognised that such a case is not explicitly governed by Regulation No 40/94 or by any other legislative measure. (39)

71. Nevertheless, the absence of an express provision does not preclude the application of Community law and the general principles of the Community legal order, in particular those relating to judicial cooperation between national judicial authorities and the Court of Justice, the principle of the effectiveness of Community law and the principle requiring sincere cooperation under Article 10 EC.

72. Although the national court plays a preponderant role in the context of Article 234 EC, in submitting or withdrawing a request for an interpretative preliminary ruling as it sees fit, (40) it must not be forgotten that the primary aim of that mechanism of judicial assistance is to guarantee the uniform application of Community law. (41)

73. Moreover, as part of the duty of sincere cooperation attached to the Member States, Article 10 EC imposes obligations on the national judicial authorities, (42) such as that of interpreting Community law in the light of the Community legal order and, in particular, directives. (43)

74. Consequently, when a national court gives a decision in which it employs an indeterminate legal concept backed up by a directly applicable Community provision, such as that relating to the likelihood of confusion of Community trade marks, in a manner that openly conflicts with the case-law of the Court of First Instance of the European Communities, compliance with the abovementioned obligations and the great importance of the system of preliminary references require it to have recourse to Article 234 EC in order to avoid the legal uncertainty which, in judicial circles, arises from the coexistence of divergent judgments within the Union.

75. The German court's decision rejects the Court of First Instance's thesis that the degree of phonetic similarity between the two trade marks is so insignificant that it will not give rise to any likelihood of confusion, since the degree of identity of the marks is not sufficiently great. In giving reasons for its decision, the Landgericht Hamburg relies on the case-law of the Bundesgerichtshof (German Supreme Court in civil and criminal matters), according to which failure to consider phonetic similarities when evaluating the likelihood of confusion unjustifiably deprives the proprietor of the trade mark of some of the protection to which he is entitled.

76. Even if it is accepted that the national judicial authorities to which Article 234(2) EC applies, such as the Landgericht Hamburg, enjoy a degree of latitude as regards preliminary references, (44) the need for the uniform application of Community law dictates that recourse must be had to Article 234 EC, specifically where the approach taken by a national high court is at odds with that taken by a Community Court, particularly if the decisive impact which a request for a ruling might have had in resolving the dispute is taken into account.

77. The fact that the decision given by the first German court was open to appeal does not diminish the harm caused, essentially by creating legal uncertainty, as the Commission has emphasised. Faced with such a clear conflict of interpretation of a Community provision, the only course open to that court was to use Article 234 EC; (45) it is to be hoped, however, that an appeal court will mitigate the effects of the situation that has arisen, for the sake of interpretative rigour and the European spirit that has presided over the comportment of the judicial authorities in that country, which has always led the field so far as concerns the sincere cooperation with the Court of Justice provided for by the Treaties.

78. In short, we should probably not just complain of the way the Landgericht Hamburg has conducted itself in this context; we must also hope that such dysfunctions will be brought to an end and that the legislature will become aware of how urgent it is to improve the complex legislative framework set up to facilitate harmonious development of economic activity in the Community as a whole, achieving full establishment and proper functioning of the internal market within a European Union that is increasingly convinced of the importance of its contribution to the construction of a better continent.

V – Costs

79. Since the plea in law put forward by Mülhens has been rejected as unfounded, the appeal must be dismissed and the appellant must be ordered to pay the costs.

VI – Conclusion

80. Consequently, in view of the foregoing considerations, I suggest that the Court of Justice dismiss the appeal brought by Mülhens GmbH & Co. KG against the judgment delivered by the Court of First Instance on 3 March 2004 in Case T-355/02 and order the appellant to pay costs of these proceedings.

---

1 – Original language: Spanish.

2 – Case C-355/02 Mülhens GmbH & Co KG v OHIM [2004] ECR II-0000.

3 – Council Regulation (EC) No 40/94 of 20 December 1993 on the Community trade mark (OJ 1993 L 11, p. 1), as amended by Council Regulation (EC) No

3288/94 of 22 December 1994 for the implementation of the agreements concluded in the context of the Uruguay Round (OJ 1994 L 349, p. 83), and by Council Regulation (EC) No 422/2004 of 19 February 2004 (OJ 2004 L 70, p. 1).

4 – Paragraphs 34 to 42 of the contested judgment.

5 – Paragraphs 44 to 47 of the contested judgment.

6 – Case C-342/97 Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer [1999] ECR I-3819, paragraph 28.

7 – Of course, consumers in the Slav countries would have detected this rapidly, although not without some surprise as far as perfumes are concerned, because that word, in their respective languages, for example ‘sýr’ in Czech, ‘ser’ (closer to the English pronunciation) in Polish, ‘sýr’ in Slovakian and ‘sir’ in Slovenian, means ‘cheese’.

8 – Paragraphs 49 to 51.

9 – In Case T-292/01 Phillips-Van Heusen Corp. v OHIM [2003] ECR II-4335, it laid down that rule, which was applied subsequently in Joined Cases T-183/02 and T-184/02 El Corte Inglés v OHIM [2004] ECR II-0000, paragraph 93, and Case T-185/02 Claude Ruiz-Picasso and Others v OHIM [2004] ECR II-0000, in which appeals are pending.

10 – Paragraphs 51 to 54.

11 – Paragraphs 55 and 56 of the contested judgment.

12 – Concerning the scope of judicial review by the Court of Justice in trade mark cases, see my Opinion of 14 May 2002 in the proceedings which gave rise to the judgment of 19 September 2002 in Case C-104/00 DKV [2002] ECR I-7651, paragraphs 58 to 60.

13 – Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer, paragraph 28.

14 – See point 58 et seq. below.

15 – Case C-136/92 P Commission v Brazzelli Lualdi and Others [1994] ECR I-1981, paragraphs 49 and 66, Joined Cases C-238/99 P, C-244/99 P, C-245/99 P, C-247/99 P, C-250/99 P to C-252/99 P and C-254/99 P Limburgse Vinyl Maatschappij and Others v Commission [2002] ECR I-8375, paragraph 194, and Case C-312/00 P Commission v Camar and Tico [2002] ECR I-11355, paragraph 69.

16 – Mentioned in footnote 8 to this Opinion.

17 – Opinion in Case C-361/04 P Claude Ruiz-Picasso and Others, in which judgment has not yet been delivered, point 27 et seq.

18 – Case C-251/95 SABEL v Puma [1997] ECR I-6191, paragraph 22.

19 – SABEL, paragraph 23.

20 – See also Lloyd Schuhfabrik Meyer, paragraph 25.

21 – Opinion in Case C-361/04 P Claude Ruiz-Picasso and Others, point 35.

22 – Case C-53/92 P Hilti v Commission [1994] ECR I-667, paragraph 42.

23 – J. Álvarez, ‘Marca comunitaria y marcas nacionales’, in Marca y Diseño Comunitarios, Alberto Bercovitz Rodríguez-Cano (Coord.), Ed. Aranzadi, Pamplona, 1996, p. 191 et seq., in particular p. 195 et seq.

24 – Trade Mark Regulation, fifth recital.

25 – Article 14(1) of Regulation No 40/94.

26 – This upending of the well-known Community law principle is an image attributable to E. Gastinel, La marque communautaire, L.G.D.J., Paris, 1998, p. 197.

27 – A. Bender, ‘Artikel 14’, in F.L. Ekey/D. Klippel, Heidelberger Kommentar zum Markenrecht, C.F. Müller, Heidelberg, 2003, p. 953; to the same effect, see E. Gastinel, op. cit., p. 197.

28 – According to Article 91(1) of Regulation No 40/94, they are national judicial authorities of first and second instance which the Member States have designated to carry out the functions assigned to them. Thus, in contrast to proceedings against measures and decisions of OHIM, the Court of Justice is not their court of last instance, although they continue to be subject to the judicial cooperation mechanism laid down by Article 234 EC. See, in that connection, ‘Artikel 91’, in F.L. Ekey/D. Klippel, op. cit., p. 1248.

29 – The commentators are unanimous. M. Desantes Real, ‘La marca comunitaria y el Derecho internacional privado’, in Alberto Bercovitz Rodríguez-Cano (Coord.), op. cit., p. 247, also offers a guide to the interpretation of the terms of Regulation No 40/94 in order to identify the applicable law, basically Articles 14(1), 97 and 98.

30 – Regarding the problems of provisions of private international law concerning Regulation No 40/94, see M. Desantes Real, op. cit., p. 225 et seq.; P. von Kapff, ‘Artikel 93’ and ‘Artikel 94’ in Ekey/Klippel, op. cit., p. 1249 et seq.; and M. Lobato García-Miján, La marca comunitaria – Aspectos procesales y de Derecho Internacional Privado del Reglamento sobre la marca comunitaria, Publicaciones del Real Colegio de España, Bologna, 1997.

31 – P. Morenilla Allard, in La protección jurisdiccional de la marca comunitaria, COLEX, Madrid, 1999, p. 141, puts forward the idea that reliance on the procedural rules of the Member States was more of a necessity than an option. To the same effect, see E. Gastinel, op. cit., p. 198.

32 – Article 10 of Regulation No 40/94.

33 – M. Lobato García-Miján, op. cit., p. 183.

34 – A. Von Mühlendahl/D.C. Ohlgart, Die Gemeinschaftsmarke, C.H. Beck and Stämpfli & Cie AG, Munich, 1998, pp. 213 and 214.

35 – M. Lobato García-Miján, op. cit., p. 187.

36 – U. Bumiller, Durchsetzung der Gemeinschaftsmarke in der Europäischen Union, C.H. Beck, Munich, 1997, p. 21.

37 – According to which ‘... contradictory judgments should be avoided in actions which involve the same acts and the same parties and which are brought on the basis of a Community trade mark and parallel national trade marks ...’.

38 – M. Lobato García-Miján, op. cit., p. 219.

39 – Nor is any adequate solution to the Landgericht Hamburg case to be found in Directive 2004/48/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the enforcement of intellectual property rights (OJ 2004 L 157, p. 16), which applies to trade marks by virtue of Article 1 and whose purpose, according to the 10th recital in its preamble, is ‘to approximate legislative systems [of the Member States relating to protection of intellectual property] so as to ensure a high, equivalent and homogeneous level of protection in the Internal Market?.

40 – A preliminary reference concerning validity, on the other hand, is compulsory for all national courts (Case 314/85 Foto Frost [1987] ECR 4199). Regarding the scope of that obligation, however, see the Opinion delivered on 30 June 2005 in Case C-461/03 Gaston Schul, in which judgment has not yet been delivered, point 60 et seq.

41 – Case 13/61 De Geus en Uitdenbogerd [1962] ECR 45 and Case 107/76 Hoffmann-La Roche [1977] ECR 957, paragraph 5.

42 – In that regard, see A. Von Bogdandy, ‘Artikel 10’ in E. Grabitz/M. Hilf, Das Recht der Europäischen Union, C.H. Beck, Munich, 2005, p. 19, paragraph 53 et seq.

43 – Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 22 et seq.

44 – R. Annand and H. Norman, Guide to the Community trade mark, Blackstone Press Limited, London, 1998, p. 210.

45 – Such direct affronts to the authority of a Community Court might give rise to liability on the part of the Member State for infringements of Community law attributable to a judicial authority, even if not a supreme court, by extension of the dicta of the Court of Justice in Case C-224/01 Köbler [2003] ECR I-10239.

---